

Earl's Diary - Friday - February 28, 2014

Dear Loyal Readers, everywhere;

The time had come to once again travel. For the past week I have been visiting with friends and relatives. The Peanut has been resting in a storage facility for all this time. It is anxious to get on the move again.

This afternoon I headed north on I-17. My ultimate destination for today was the town of Cottonwood and Dead Horse Ranch State Park. The drive through central Arizona was interesting. Slowly I was losing the desert country and entering high desert mountain country.

About 2 hours after I left Anthem, I arrived at Cottonwood. To my surprise, Cottonwood is no small town. It has several stop lights and every national chain imaginable. To top is all off, there is a WalMart! Dead Horse Ranch is just on the outskirts of town.

I quickly found my reserved site in the campground, unhitched The Peanut and once again explored the town. I needed to buy a few groceries for the coming 5 days.

Later this night Greg, Janea, Kate and Dalton arrived in their Escape 17 trailer. They are set up in the site next to mine and will be here until Sunday.

Well, dear readers, it's off to bed for me right now. It's supposed to rain tonight. I think I hear a few drops falling from the sky right now. Thanks for coming along with me today. Bye for now - - Earl

The Peanut in storage in Anthem. Now you know why I call my Scamp 5er "The Peanut".

In fact, here is Greg's Escape 17 behind The Peanut. Looks like two peanuts in the shell doesn't it?
